Position Summary*
Under the direction of the Director of Health Promotion & Wellness (HPW) and in a very diverse educational environment, the Men's Health Educator is responsible for developing, implementing, evaluating and continually improving workshops, outreach, presentations, peer leadership programs, and campus based affinity groups that focus on health promotion and prevention activities related to men's health. Content areas include but are not limited to activities and campaigns related to use of alcohol and other drugs (AOD), mental health issues, sexual and reproductive health, sexual violence prevention, general wellness, and exercise/nutrition. The incumbent works closely with the HPW team of health educators, the campus Title IX personnel and committees, student leaders and student clubs, faculty/staff, and other campus stakeholders to promote individual and environmental changes designed to promote men's health and wellness, as well as to interrupt destructive patterns of stereotypical gender role socialization and address systemic, ecological and cultural factors related to gender inequities on a college campus. Specific populations served include but are not limited to fraternities, student-athletes, first-time freshmen, residential life staff and students, incoming students, student organizations, and other student affairs professionals, faculty and administrators.

Minimum Qualifications

- Bachelor's degree in an approved health education program or related health field.
- Equivalent of two to three years of progressively responsible health education experience or combination of education and experience which provides the required knowledge and abilities, preferably in a higher education environment.
- Ability to assess and implement strategies to impact men's health issues, including issues related to sexual violence, substance use, mental health, and wellness.
- Ability to incorporate concepts of social justice and equity into health education program planning, particularly related to planning for men's health issues.
- General knowledge of, or ability to quickly learn, current and emerging college age student health problems and existing methods of intervention and control, particularly regarding men's health issues.
- Demonstrated knowledge of evidence-informed health promotion programs/initiatives, as well as of environmental strategies, preferably as they inform strategies to impact men's health issues.
- Demonstrated ability in developing peer-to-peer leadership programs, including recruitment, training and supervision of student volunteer peers.
- Ability to plan, develop, implement and evaluate programs to meet the needs of an ethnically and culturally diverse university campus and are targeted to specific populations on a college campus such as residence halls, athletic teams, and Greek organizations.
- Possesses strong oral, written and electronic media communication skills.
- Competency or ability to quickly learn use of computer applications including Student Health Services (SHS) Practice topics, as well as provide support to staff in developing and implementing outreach that covers all health and wellness issues and crosses all areas of the campus community, and utilizes a public health framework that addresses individual, group, community, environmental and societal determinants of health.
- In coordination with the Title IX Coordinator or designee, who is responsible for all sexual violence prevention programming, develop and implement workshops, presentations, social media campaigns, and other prevention activities that educate students regarding sexual violence and aim to shift the campus climate regarding sexual violence, including prevention education that adopts a social justice and social change framework, as well as meets the requirements under the federal Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).
- Develop and implement programs for male college students that promote and advocate for alcohol and drug risk reduction, empower students to make safer choices when using alcohol and other drugs; and communicate the negative consequences of high risk alcohol and drug use.
- Develop and implement projects for male college students that promote and advocate for sexual wellness.
- Develop and implement prevention activities that promote and advocate for men's mental health and self-wellness, including stress reduction, anger management, healthy exercise and nutrition habits, and overall health and well-being.
- Collaborate with peer leaders and provide a positive role model to male students, as well as offer leadership development opportunities for students to address issues related to men's healthy and positive gender socialization and identity development.
- Continually evaluate programs and services and utilize data/evidence to prioritize work as well as make enhancements and improvements.

Preferred Qualifications

- Master's degree or terminal degree in a relevant field.
- Experience developing a men's program related to health and wellness issues, preferably at an institution of higher education.
- Experience in the areas of gender violence and interpersonal violence prevention and/or outreach.
